Schools Guide 2020

Bilingualism is a 'gift for life', according to principal Frédérique Brisset. At L'École de Battersea, the best of French and British education is woven together et voilà, by the age of six, children are bilingual in spoken language – and in written language by the time they're 11. Fencing is huge (the elite squad trains in Antibes) and relaxation techniques keep pupils calm and present. One source was so impressed by the food that she declared she would happily pay for it in a restaurant. Three quarters of leavers go on to French schools, such as Lycée Français Charles De Gaulle, while others gain places at Whitgift and Queen's Gate. It's so popular that there are calls from parents to open a senior school.
